An old tredesmen advances the following views on advertising: "The first utility of f equent and regular at vertising corsis s in the: There is no all tin es a large class of persons, both in country and town, who have no fixed place for the preclase of cettain it is an axellent remedy; it situalities this organ into healthy activity, and produces many remark-Lecessiy articles, and are rady to be swayed and diawn toward any parties that place which is cannestly brought under their notice. Indifferent to all, they yield without be jettion to the first wlousks. Then in the country. a considerable number of persons who wish a supply of the article relvertised, and do not know of any particular place where it is to be got, being thus intnished with the address of a person the who can supply it, naturally opens a communication which leads to much ulteriar business.

People in the country are also liable to be favorably impressed by a ficquent sight of a name in the newspapers. The advertising acquires distinction in their eyes, and thus they are led, in making a choice, to prefer him. But by far the most important effect of an indirect nature. It conveys the idea that the advertiser is anxious for business, and such a person is always supposed to be industrious. attentive and civil; and who keeps the best of articles, at the cheapest rate does every thing in the neatest, motradesmanlike manner, and in general uses every expedient to gratify and attract customers. People like to purchase umler these circumstances.

A singular discovery has been made on board the Irvine, a full rigged vessel, recently in drydock at Rathechithe, London.
